rowds of ladies and gentlemen pushed their way to the polling places to deposic ballots on this "national" contest. From the day that the idea was first suggested in the Republic, and followed up with the claims of ardent admirers for favorite flowers, the question began to take on the warm and interesting characteristics of political contest. It was evident at the start litical contest. It was evident at the start that the golden rod and the sunflower litical contest. It was evident at the start that the golden rod and the sunflower would run a comparatively close race, and the prophets declared that the golden rod would win. The poils closed on Wedness day night, and a large force of clerks, under the supervision of Director T. B. Boyd, occupied a major part of yesterday in counting the ballots in the treasurer's office. All the esplonage usually characterizing the democratic spies who watch a republican returning board was prevaint among the supporters of the two leading flowers, and a fair count, without forged tally-sheets or "repeating tickets," was the result. There were 21,213 votes cast in all, the golden rod receiving 6:347 and the sunflower coming next with 4,748. The audience here broke forth with deatening apphause when it was known that the golden rod had received the highest number of votes, and it was given in that produced by nervous irritation of the stom
